

The Day the Moon Visited the Earth

Yasmina Nawfal

Up above the world so high.
"I wish I had a new friend," it gasped, gazing at the twinkling Earth.

"That's it! I'm going to Earth!" exclaimed the Moon. After stretching its body and yawning, the Moon dragged its shiny silver hat as it journeyed down.

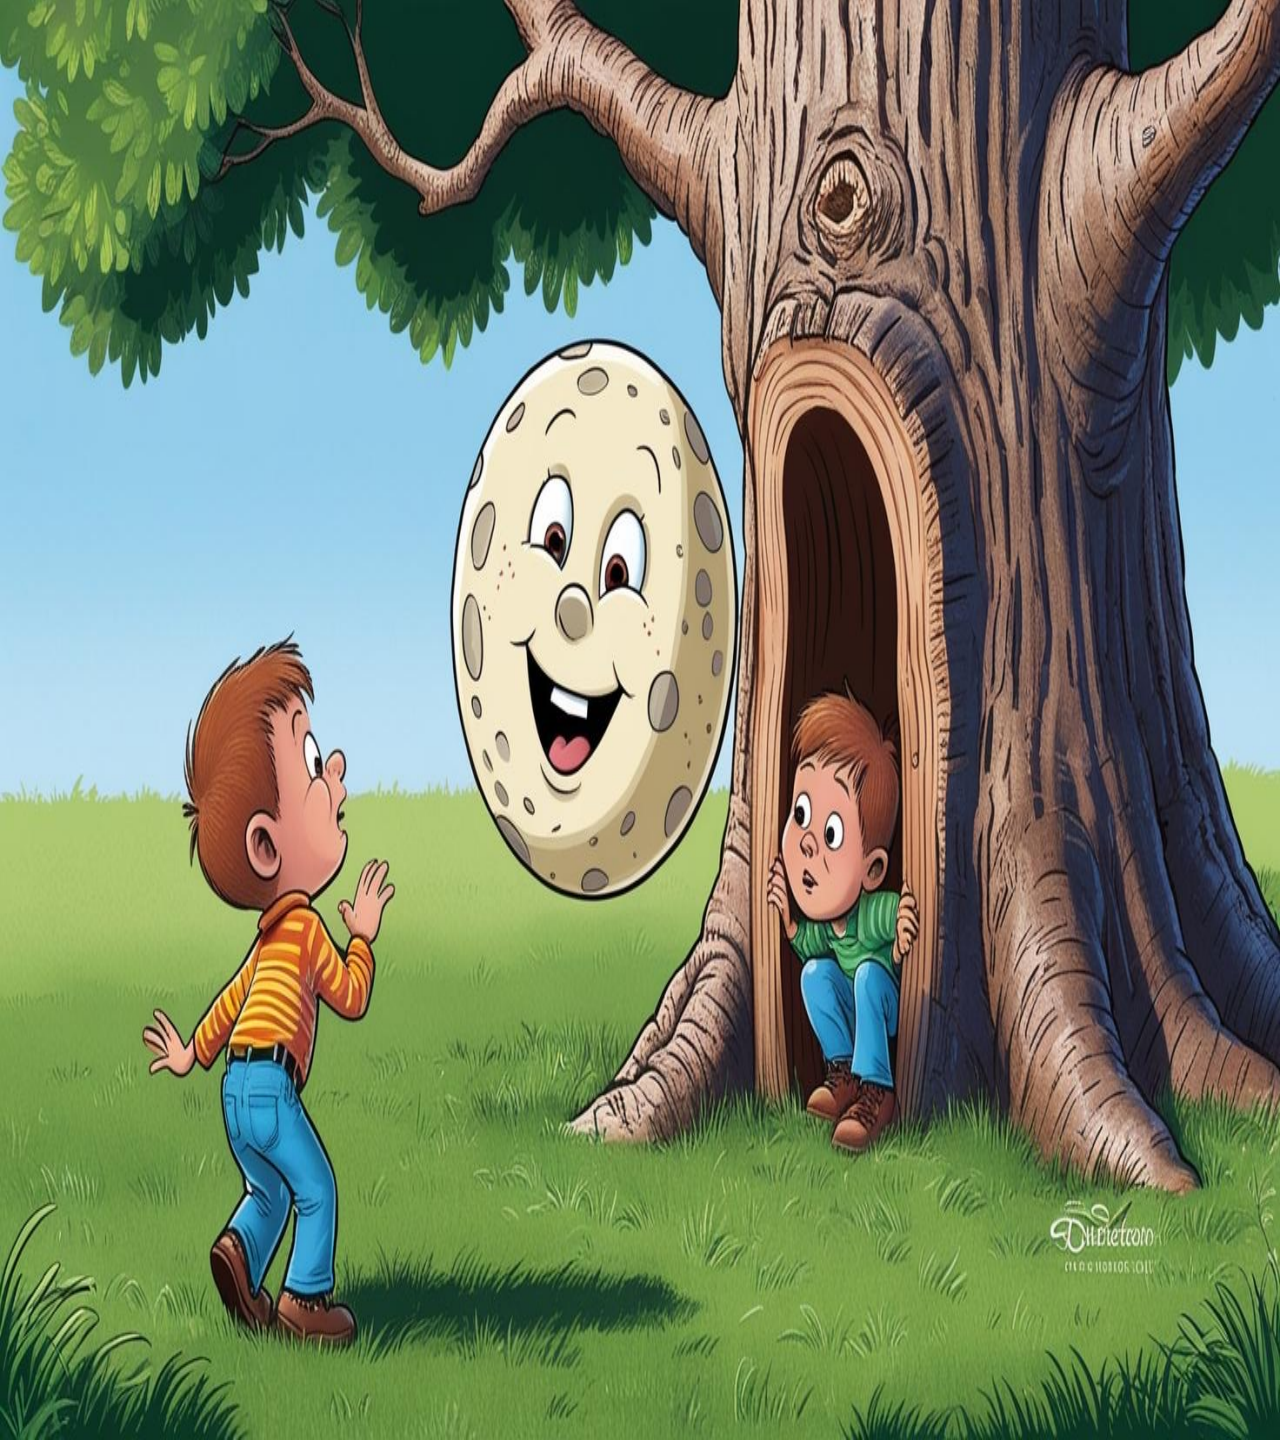

"Whoosh! Down I go!" As it passed through the starlit night sky, the Moon greeted the world just like a star descending toward fresh directions.

"Boing! Hello, Earth!" The moon bounced into the backyard, surprising two young brothers.

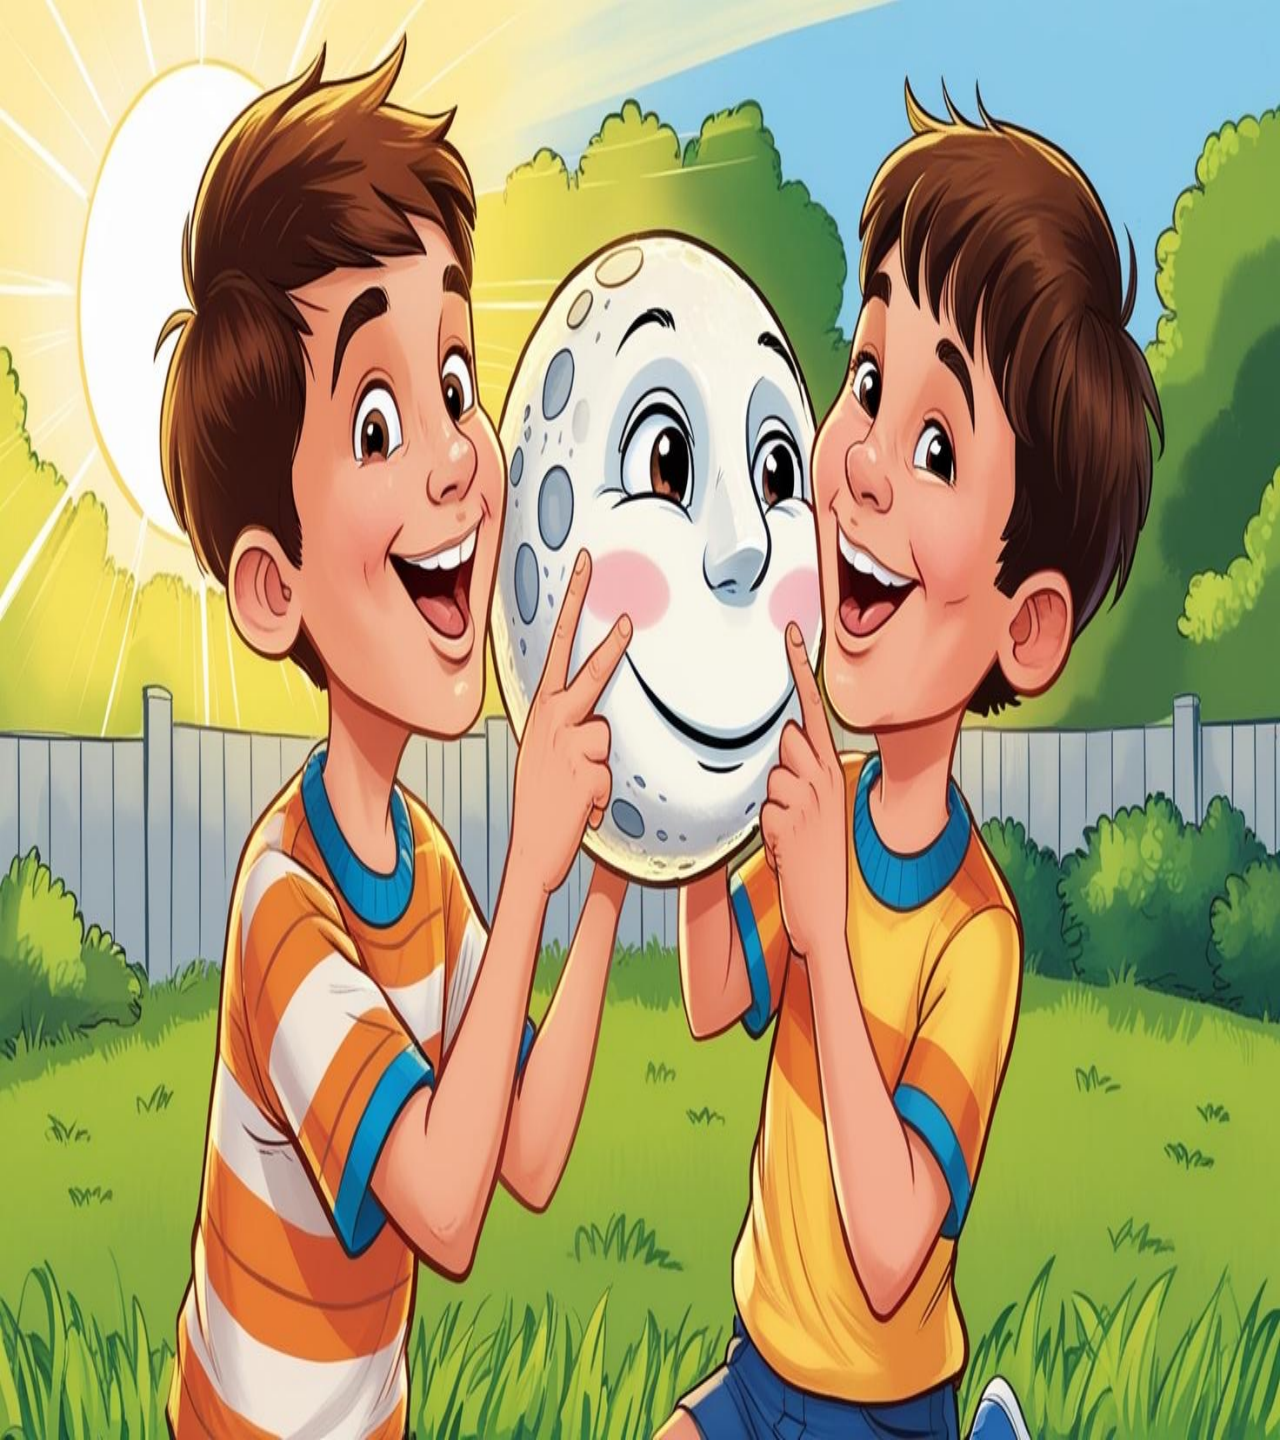

"Who are you?"
gasped the curious brother.
"I'm the Moon,
and I've come to play!" it
twinkled back

"Munch, munch!
Thank you!" The Moon spoke
through crumbs
while making a scattering motion of small stars around
its expression that revealed happiness.

"And then... the Little Star took a breath so loud that it lit up the whole sky!" The Moon burst into loud laughter while both brothers shared their happiness.

"Your turn! Make a silly face!" challenged the Moon. Every member created their most ridiculous facial expressions as the night filled with hearty laughter.

"Dance-off!" whooped the Moon. The backyard sparkled with happiness as they danced happily through the area.

The Moon softly
shared a story so they could listen to
it and their voices
were as soft as a passing whisper.

"Once upon a starry night, just like tonight," began the Moon, its voice as soft as a cloud.

"Goodbye, dear friends! Let's meet again soon!" From his rising height, the Moon shouted out its words to its friends.

"Oops! I almost forgot my hat!" The Moon giggled, swooping down to snatch its sparkly cap.

"Catch!" yelled the brothers, tossing the hat high into the air. "Thank you!" twinkled the Moon, catching it on its head.

Following their encounter with the Moon, the brothers drew illustrations about their experience, filled with happiness.

As they drifted off to sleep, the light of the Moon kissed them goodnight, promising more adventures to come.
